

Top tips for our working carers

1. Speak to you manager and talk about a contingency plan if you may have to be off at short notice

Carers do have statutory rights to address these needs.

The Work and Families Act 2006 and the Employment Rights Act 1996 give working carers rights to help them balance work and caring.

All employees have a right to request flexible working after they have worked for the same employer for 26 weeks (six months), as long as they haven't already made a flexible working request within the last 12 months.

Flexible working is to help staff with caring responsibilities to continue working

Examples

- home working
- part-time working
- term-time
- working staggered hours working
- working compressed hours

Special Leave is normally short-term and may be with or without pay and intended to help staff balance the dual demands of their home and work responsibilities at times of unforeseen need through the provision of paid or unpaid leave.
